PRODUCT SELECTION / VERTICAL BLINDS

Prism Acrylic Vertical Blinds

Transparent and translucent acrylic slats for a decorative vertical screen.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Prism Acrylic Vertical uses methacrylate in a side-drawing format. Clear, coloured and diffusing effects allow the blind to alter the visual boundary across a window without always creating an opaque barrier.

The range includes 89mm and 150mm formats with design-dependent options. The material is acrylic rather than ordinary glass. Transparency, reflection and colour should be assessed with light passing through a sample, as that is how the product is used at the window.

- Decorative light transmission
- Two vertical proportions
- Adjustable slat angle

PRISM ACRYLIC VERTICAL BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible transparent or translucent colours
- Selected surface effects
- Track and draw configuration

Practical points

- Clear finishes do not provide opaque privacy
- Broader slats need more clearance
- Any solar-performance claim must be product-specific

How it works

The slats turn and move along their track. The broader format needs more room for rotation and stacking. Special surface or film effects are reviewed individually; no general solar-control performance is assumed for the whole range.

Choosing the finish and details

Explain whether you need privacy, a coloured light effect or a decorative partition. We can then select an appropriate finish and check the track layout. Where privacy is essential, the appearance under evening lighting deserves particular attention.
