Cork Finish Venetian Blinds

A cork surface over a supporting slat, with a warm and visibly textured appearance.

Cork Finish brings a different surface to the Venetian format. The cork is applied over a supporting wood or aluminium slat, creating a layered product rather than a solid cork strip. Its texture can provide a useful contrast to smooth paint, glass and metal around the window.

The range includes 50mm and 70mm formats with selected stained cork effects. The appearance changes with the cut and finish of the cork, so a small sample is useful when comparing it with natural flooring or wall finishes. We confirm the exact support material for the chosen option.

- Distinctive cork texture
- A choice of supporting construction
- A coordinated Venetian finish

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible stained cork surfaces
- Wood or aluminium support as specified
- Coordinated valance and supported ladder details

Practical points

- The slats are not solid cork
- Natural surface variation is expected
- Finish and size compatibility are checked before order

How it works

The blind works by tilting and raising the slats, with a coordinated valance covering the headrail. A textured surface does not change the need for a correctly sized mechanism and sufficient clearance. Supporting material and finish affect the completed blind's weight and handling.

Choosing the finish and details

Choose the cork appearance first, then decide how prominent the ladder cords or tapes should be. We can check the compatible details and intended dimensions together. For several windows, tell us which blinds will be seen as a group.
