PRODUCT SELECTION / VERTICAL BLINDS

Cork Finish Vertical Blinds

Cork-covered vertical slats for a warm, visibly textured screen.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Cork Finish Vertical brings a natural-looking surface to a long slat format. The cork is applied over a supporting slat, giving a different construction from solid timber or a woven hanging fabric. Its texture can sit comfortably beside stone, timber and plain wall finishes.

The range uses 89mm vertical slats in selected cork appearances. The pattern and tone can vary across the surface, so a physical sample is useful when the blind needs to relate to another natural material.

- Distinctive cork texture
- A tall decorative format
- Side-drawing operation

CORK FINISH VERTICAL BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible cork finishes
- Supporting construction confirmed per option
- Track and control arrangement

Practical points

- The slats are not solid cork
- Surface variation is expected
- Direct moisture exposure requires assessment

How it works

The slats tilt and draw along an overhead track. Their supporting material, thickness and finish are checked for the chosen option. Stack position and clearance matter particularly when the blind is fitted in front of a frequently used door.

Choosing the finish and details

Tell us whether the cork should be a quiet background or a more pronounced feature. We can narrow the finish choice and review the opening at the same time. The quoted specification confirms construction, track and controls.
