Mirror and Wood Venetian Blinds

A mirrored front and a wood back combined in one Venetian slat.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Mirror and Wood gives the two faces of the blind distinct appearances. An applied mirrored layer sits on the front of an abachi slat, while the rear retains a specified wood finish. It is a useful option when the room-facing effect needs to differ from the view on the other side.

The range includes a straight broad format and a selected curved profile. The combination of timber and reflective material is more complex than a simple painted slat, so its appearance and natural movement should be understood before selection.

- Different front and rear appearances
- Reflective room-facing surface
- Timber backing

MIRROR AND WOOD VENETIAN BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible mirror-front finishes
- Supported wood colours for the rear
- Straight or curved profile where available

Practical points

- Mixed materials can produce movement
- Reflections vary with position and lighting
- Precise profile availability must be confirmed

How it works

As the slats tilt, different faces and reflections become visible. The two materials can respond differently to changes in temperature and humidity, which may produce some movement. We check the intended room conditions and operating clearance as part of the specification.

Choosing the finish and details

Consider both the front and back samples together. The effect depends on the lighting and what is reflected in the room, not only the mirror colour. A coordinated valance and the supported control arrangement complete the proposed blind.
