PRODUCT SELECTION / INTERIOR FOLDING DOORS

Glazed Fold Door

A veneered interior folding door with glazed sections, combining a timber frame pattern with light passing through the selected glass.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

The Glazed Fold Door adds glass sections to a narrow-panel timber folding format. It can divide an interior while allowing light to pass between the spaces, subject to the chosen glazing.

The glazed areas may be arranged as longer sections or divided into smaller panes. This changes both the appearance and the balance between timber and glass across the closed door.

- Light can pass through the glazed sections
- A timber appearance with a defined pane pattern
- Folding movement where a swinging leaf is inconvenient

At a glance

GLAZED FOLD DOOR

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible timber veneer finishes
- Selected glazing finishes
- Long or divided glazing layout
- Coordinated hardware and opening direction

Practical points

- Glazing choice must suit the intended use and applicable project requirements.
- The folded stack occupies part of the doorway.
- No fire or acoustic rating is assumed without a confirmed specification.

Choose the glazing and timber as one design

The listed construction uses veneered plywood sections with timber hinge components, a matching timber handle and a magnetic closing arrangement. The glass is incorporated into the panel design, with its finish and suitability confirmed for the order.

A clear-looking glass, a textured finish and a more private glazing choice produce different results. We confirm the current glass options and their intended use rather than choosing solely from a small colour image.

Plan safe and useful access

The folded stack, track and handle all affect the clear passage through the opening. The floor level, upper support and surrounding trim are checked before manufacturing dimensions are agreed. A glazed folding door also needs appropriate handling during installation.

For a family or commercial setting, explain how the opening will be used and whether the project sets any particular glazing or door-performance requirement. The quotation identifies the selected glass, door finish and hardware so that the complete assembly can be checked before manufacture.
