PRODUCT SELECTION / VERTICAL BLINDS

Layered Finish Vertical Blinds

Vertical wood slats with regular aluminium inserts for a mixed-material screen.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Layered Finish Vertical combines abachi wood with aluminium inserts in a repeating arrangement. It gives a wide glazed area a more varied rhythm than a single-material vertical blind, connecting the timber surface with a sharper metal detail.

The construction uses 89mm wood slats with an aluminium insert after each group of four. The combination is a physical change of material rather than a printed effect. We confirm the selected wood finish and metal detail together so the quotation describes the whole arrangement.

- Mixed timber and metal surfaces
- A repeating contrast across the opening
- Side-drawing light control

LAYERED FINISH VERTICAL BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible wood finishes
- Aluminium insert arrangement
- Track, control and optional top detail

Practical points

- Mixed materials have different movement characteristics
- Stack space must be allowed
- Finish combinations depend on the current production range

How it works

The slats turn for light control and stack sideways on an overhead track. The draw direction and stack space need to work with any doors, handles or nearby circulation. A top valance is considered separately where required by the design.

Choosing the finish and details

Provide the approximate opening width and say which side should remain clearest when the blind is open. The intended contrast between wood and metal can then be assessed alongside the track and controls. Current finish combinations are checked before order.
