Metal Slat Venetian Blinds

Aluminium slats with coordinated timber finishing details for a lighter visual treatment.

Metal Slat is an aluminium Venetian within the wider collection. It combines metal slats with selected wood finishing details, allowing a different balance of materials from an all-wood blind. Smooth, textured and selected perforated effects offer several ways to control the overall appearance.

The range includes 50mm and 70mm slat formats, with finishes varying by width. A perforated slat behaves differently from an opaque one: openings in the material affect light and screening even when the slats are tilted shut. We explain that distinction when reviewing the finish shortlist.

- Metal surface and timber detailing
- Several finish effects
- Tilt control within a broad-slat format

METAL SLAT VENETIAN BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible plain, textured or perforated finishes
- Covered or exposed headrail subject to specification
- Coordinated wood trim and controls

Practical points

- Perforated finishes do not provide opaque screening
- Finishes vary by slat width
- Reflective appearance changes with lighting

How it works

The headrail style changes the look at the top of the window. A covered mechanism gives a more concealed finish, while an exposed traditional arrangement makes the mechanism part of the design. The material, control and trim combination is specified for the individual blind.

Choosing the finish and details

Choose the finish for both sides of the window view, particularly beside reflective glazing or metal frames. A sample helps establish sheen and texture. If glare reduction or evening privacy is a priority, tell us before selecting a perforated or more light-transmitting surface.
