PRODUCT SELECTION / SLIDING PANELS & SCREENS

Natural Stone Panels

Sliding panels faced with natural stone laminate, using quartzite- or slate-derived surfaces for a material-led interior feature.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Natural Stone Panels bring the irregular character of stone into a sliding interior screen. The listed construction uses natural stone laminate on both faces, with the selected finish forming the main decorative feature.

This is a different material choice from a printed stone-effect surface. Grain, colour and texture vary naturally, so the finished panels will share a general character rather than reproduce a sample exactly.

- Actual natural stone surface character
- A distinctive solid interior screen
- Both visible faces considered in the design

NATURAL STONE PANELS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible natural stone finishes
- Panel orientation and layout
- Opening and stacking direction
- Project-specific edge and support details

Practical points

- Natural stone patterns are not identical from panel to panel.
- Continuous vein matching is not assumed.
- The complete panel weight and edge detail require confirmation.

Use natural variation as part of the design

Quartzite- and slate-derived surface options offer different tones and textures. The direction and scale of the natural pattern can become more apparent across a large panel than in a small sample.

Where several panels sit together, discuss the desired visual relationship between them. A completely continuous vein pattern should not be assumed. The selection and layout are confirmed as part of the proposed specification and available material.

Plan support and handling early

Stone-faced panels require a suitable track and fixing arrangement for the finished weight. The complete construction, including edges and any frame detail, is confirmed for the order. It is not enough to select a decorative surface without considering how the panel will move.

For a room divider, both faces are visible and deserve the same attention. We also consider the parked panels, clearance at the floor and cleaning access. Send drawings or photographs with your enquiry so the supply and installation proposal can address the complete opening.
