PRODUCT SELECTION / INTERIOR FOLDING DOORS

Panelled Fold Door

An interior folding door with timber inset panels, adding depth and a more traditional panelled appearance to a compact folding format.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

The Panelled Fold Door uses a folding timber-veneer structure with inset timber details. The panel pattern adds depth to the face while the linked sections gather to clear the opening.

It is a useful design to compare when a plain folding door feels too simple for the surrounding joinery. The pattern should be considered at the full doorway scale, especially where the opening is narrow.

- A more detailed timber face
- Traditional panel character in a folding format
- Coordinated finish and hardware

PANELLED FOLD DOOR

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible timber veneers
- One long or several inset panel sections
- Coordinated timber finish
- Opening direction and hardware detail

Practical points

- The construction combines veneer, plywood and solid timber details.
- The folded stack reduces the clear passage.
- Additional performance or locking requirements must be specified.

A panelled face within a folding construction

The listed design uses veneered plywood sections, timber hinge components and solid timber inset panels. The inset area can be arranged as one longer panel or divided into smaller sections, depending on the selected configuration.

A coordinated veneer, timber detail and finish are agreed together. The use of solid timber in the inset does not mean that every part of the door is solid wood. We describe the construction clearly in the quotation.

Balance decorative detail with the opening

The pattern and section widths affect how the door looks when closed, while the folded stack determines the space remaining when it is open. We check the track position, support and finished floor clearance alongside the chosen panel layout.

The standard closing arrangement is magnetic, with coordinated handles and hardware. If the opening has an additional requirement for locking, fire performance, accessibility or acoustic separation, raise it before ordering so a suitable specification can be confirmed rather than assumed.
