PRODUCT SELECTION / DECORATIVE BLINDS

Ridge Wood Blinds

A 70mm shaped wood Venetian with a more defined surface profile.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Ridge gives broad wood slats a defined profile that changes the way light falls across the blind. The effect is more sculptural than a flat painted Venetian while remaining part of a practical window treatment with adjustable slats.

The construction uses 70mm abachi slats. It can be specified in compatible wood tones or painted treatments, with the finish influencing how visible the profile becomes. The sample and product image should be considered together when choosing the effect.

- A defined shaped surface
- Broad timber proportions
- Coordinated valance detail

RIDGE WOOD BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible wood-tone and painted finishes
- Supported ladder cords or tapes
- Control assessed for weight and dimensions

Practical points

- Shaped slats need profile-specific clearance
- Stack dimensions differ from flat slats
- Natural grain and tone vary

How it works

A matching valance finishes the headrail, and supported ladder cords or tapes provide the vertical detailing. The shape affects the raised stack and operating clearance, so measurements are checked against this specific profile rather than borrowed from a standard 70mm blind.

Choosing the finish and details

Tell us how prominent you want the blind to be within the room. A close colour match to the wall softens the visual line; contrast gives the profile more emphasis. We confirm the finish and control combination with the factory before finalising the quote.
