Room Darkening Wood Blinds

Wooden Venetians with side guides and a covered top to reduce light around the edges.

Room Darkening Wood adds guided edges and coordinated top detailing to a wooden Venetian. The system is intended to reduce the light paths around a conventional blind, making it worth considering for bedrooms, guest accommodation and other spaces where greater darkness is important.

The slats use a privacy arrangement designed to avoid the usual route holes through the face. Matching wood guides address the side gaps, while a valance covers the headrail area. These details work together and need to be planned as one assembly.

- Reduced light paths around the blind
- Matching side-guide finish
- Coordinated headrail covering

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Supported wood slat profiles
- Straight or assessed inclined guides
- Suitable control and valance details

Practical points

- Total blackout is not guaranteed for every opening
- Guides need suitable fixing space
- Performance depends on the complete fitted arrangement

How it works

The achieved darkness depends on the opening, selected profile and installation. We do not describe every application as total blackout. Straight or inclined guide layouts may be considered, with the control and fixing positions assessed for the specific window.

Choosing the finish and details

Explain the level of darkness you need and whether the room is used during daylight hours. Photographs of the full recess and any obstructions help us assess the layout. The quotation confirms the profile, guides, control and practical expectations.
