PRODUCT SELECTION / WOOD AND SCREEN

Wood and Screen Venetian Blinds

Wooden slats with shaped screen-fabric inserts for a patterned, light-filtering Venetian.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Wood and Screen Venetian combines abachi with technical fabric inserted into shaped openings. The timber forms the slat, while the screen sections allow light through selected areas. The result is more decorative than a solid wood blind and different from a continuous fabric roller.

The range uses 70mm or 90mm formats with several compatible cut-out designs. Pattern size, wood finish and screen choice work together. A darker or more open screen can change the appearance considerably even when the wood colour stays the same.

- Timber and screen in one slat
- Patterned light transmission
- Adjustable Venetian movement

WOOD AND SCREEN VENETIAN BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible cut-out patterns
- Wood finish and screen combination
- Supported controls
- Bespoke design enquiry where feasible

Practical points

- Screen inserts transmit light
- Pattern and fabric compatibility must be checked
- The broad profile needs adequate clearance

How it works

The slats tilt and gather using a compatible mechanism. Because the screen inserts transmit light, closing the slats does not make every part of the surface opaque. The wider profiles also need suitable space to rotate and a control appropriate to their weight.

Choosing the finish and details

Choose the timber finish and screen as a pair. We can review a selected pattern against the window proportions and explain its likely screening effect. Bespoke motifs can be considered subject to technical assessment and factory agreement.
