PRODUCT SELECTION / EXTERIOR SHADING

Tracked Folding Shutters

Exterior timber panels that fold along upper and lower guides, providing a structured screen for wider openings.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Tracked Folding Shutters combine fixed timber louvres with a guided folding movement. Instead of hanging solely from a set of hinges, the panels work with top and bottom guidance to manage the opening.

They can be useful where several panels need to move together across a broader façade opening. The track layout, parked position and threshold detail are central to the design.

- A guided way to move several timber panels
- A consistent fixed-louvre appearance
- Detailed planning for a broader exterior opening

Options to discuss

- Compatible exterior stains or paints
- Panel grouping and opening direction
- Recessed or raised lower-guide detail where suitable
- Reveal or wall-face installation assessment

Practical points

- The louvres do not tilt individually.
- The lower guide affects access and the surrounding construction.
- Exposure, structural support and maintenance require project assessment.

Fixed louvres in moving panels

The listed construction uses 55 mm fixed louvres within a 36 mm panel. Cedar, hemlock and pine are the documented timber choices, with compatible exterior finishes confirmed for the project.

The louvres themselves remain at the specified angle. Light and access are changed by moving the complete folding panels. The number of leaves and any dividing rails depend on the dimensions and support requirements.

Resolve the lower guide carefully

The lower guidance may be recessed or raised according to the installation design. That detail affects drainage, access, cleaning and movement through the opening. It should be resolved with the surrounding construction rather than added after the panels are made.

We also check the upper fixing, the folded-panel space and exterior exposure. Where the panels form part of a doorway or regularly used route, the clear opening and potential threshold obstruction need attention. The quotation confirms the timber, finish, guide arrangement and maintenance expectations.
