Veneer and Acrylic Venetian Blinds

Natural veneer over acrylic for a broad-slat blind with a layered construction.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Veneer and Acrylic combines a natural wood surface with an acrylic supporting layer. The result is a layered slat with a different construction from solid timber. It is useful when you want the character of veneer within a more unusual broad-slat design.

The Venetian format is listed with 90mm slats. Wood and bamboo veneer effects are selected from the compatible range, with the actual material confirmed in the quotation. The name of a finish is not used as a substitute for describing how the slat is made.

- Layered veneer appearance
- Broad slat proportions
- A distinct alternative to solid timber

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible natural veneer finishes
- Coordinated visible trim
- Control assessed for the size and material

Practical points

- This is a composite rather than solid wood
- Mixed materials may move differently with conditions
- Exact veneer and size availability require confirmation

How it works

The acrylic and veneer must be treated as one product when considering operation, cleaning and environmental conditions. A wide slat needs room to rotate, and its weight affects the control choice. The visible trim is coordinated with the proposed surface.

Choosing the finish and details

Ask to compare a sample of the assembled material where possible. That shows the edge and layered construction as well as the face colour. We check the required opening and current production options before finalising the specification.

Measuring, supply and installation
