PRODUCT SELECTION / VERTICAL BLINDS

Veneer and Acrylic Vertical Blinds

Natural veneer over acrylic in a broad vertical blind format.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Veneer and Acrylic Vertical combines a wood or bamboo surface with an acrylic supporting layer. It gives the tall slat a layered construction that differs from both solid timber and a plain transparent screen.

The collection lists 89mm and 150mm formats, with veneer choices confirmed for the selected system. The face appearance comes from natural material, so variation remains part of the finish even though the support is manufactured.

- Layered natural surface
- Two vertical proportions
- Adjustable screening and draw

VENEER AND ACRYLIC VERTICAL BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible natural veneer finishes
- Available slat width
- Track and optional top detail

Practical points

- Composite construction is not solid timber
- Natural veneer varies in tone and grain
- Mixed-material behaviour and size limits need assessment

How it works

The slats turn and stack along their track. The combination of veneer and acrylic needs to be considered when assessing room conditions, cleaning and control. Wider slats require more space to rotate and can create a more substantial side stack.

Choosing the finish and details

Look at an assembled sample where possible so you can see the edge and the face together. We can then review the desired veneer, approximate dimensions and draw arrangement. The quotation records the actual material and current production options.
