PRODUCT SELECTION / VERTICAL BLINDS

Wood Vertical Blinds

Real wood vertical slats for wide glazing and spaces where sideways stacking is useful.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Wood Vertical turns the timber line through ninety degrees. The 89mm abachi slats hang from an overhead track, tilt to change the daylight and move sideways when you want a clearer opening. It is a useful alternative to a horizontal Venetian where the width of the glazing is the dominant feature.

The longer vertical slats show natural grain and colour over a different area. They can also act as a visual screen within a room, although the track and slat movement still need to suit the layout. The blind must be moved clear before using any door behind it.

- Genuine timber in a vertical format
- Adjustable slat angle
- Sideways stacking

WOOD VERTICAL BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible wood and painted finishes
- Track and draw arrangement assessed for the opening
- Coordinated valance where specified

Practical points

- Long wood slats can show natural movement
- Stack space and handle clearance are essential
- Avoid assuming suitability near strong heat or moisture

How it works

Plan the stack position as carefully as the closed appearance. A stack beside an opening can affect the usable view or access, while an unsuitable track position may bring the slats into contact with handles or furniture. We check those clearances before confirming the fitting.

Choosing the finish and details

Choose a compatible painted or timber-tone finish and say whether the slats should draw to one side or form a divided arrangement. Natural wood responds to heat and humidity, so nearby radiators and unusual room conditions should be identified with the enquiry.
