PRODUCT SELECTION / WOVEN WOOD AND BAMBOO

Woven Wood Roll Up Blinds

A woven wood blind that gathers into a roll as it is raised.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Woven Wood Roll Up uses flexible woven strips rather than separate tilting slats. As the blind rises, the material gathers into a roll, giving the window a distinctive natural-texture treatment and a different open appearance from a folded Roman.

The range includes compatible unlined and backed versions. A backing can make the weave more opaque, while the unlined surface keeps more of its open character. The selected weave and edge detail determine which combinations can be made.

- Natural woven appearance
- Distinct roll-up movement
- Compatible backing options

WOVEN WOOD ROLL UP BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Supported woven designs
- Unlined or lined version where available
- Coordinated edging and control position

Practical points

- The raised roll occupies space
- Open weaves may give limited evening privacy
- Lining and edging availability vary by material

How it works

The roll remains visible when the blind is raised and needs space within or above the opening. Its size changes with the material and drop. We check that it will not obstruct an inward-opening sash or catch a handle when operated.

Choosing the finish and details

Compare the weave with light behind it to understand its screening effect. If evening privacy is important, say so when enquiring. We can then assess whether a backed option or another construction better meets the brief.
