PRODUCT SELECTION / WOVEN WOOD AND BAMBOO

Woven Wood Roman Blinds

Woven wood or bamboo that lifts into folds, with an optional lining on compatible designs.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Woven Wood Roman gives natural strips the movement of a folding blind. Abachi wood or bamboo elements are woven together into a flexible surface, then lifted into folds at the top of the window. The result has a different texture and movement from a Venetian made of individually tilting slats.

Compatible designs can be supplied unlined or with a fabric backing to increase opacity. A backed version needs suitable edge detailing to hold the lining. The effect on privacy and light depends on the weave and backing selected, so a lining should not be assumed to provide total blackout.

- Natural woven texture
- A folding Roman movement
- Optional backing on suitable weaves

WOVEN WOOD ROMAN BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible wood or bamboo weaves
- Unlined or supported lined construction
- Coordinated edging and valance
- Control position assessed for the window

Practical points

- Natural weave and colour vary
- The raised fold needs clear space
- Backing increases opacity but does not automatically create blackout

How it works

The raised folds occupy space at the top of the opening. Their depth depends on the drop and material, which matters particularly when a window opens into the room. A matching wood valance can cover the headrail in the specified arrangement.

Choosing the finish and details

Choose the weave first, then decide whether you want its open texture or a more opaque backed surface. We confirm the compatible lining, edging, controls and dimensions. For several windows, tell us which folds will be seen together.
