Woven Texture Venetian Blinds

A raffia-like woven appearance made from a synthetic covering over Venetian slats.

Product illustration. The agreed specification and finish determine the supplied product.

Woven Texture gives a slatted blind the appearance of a woven surface. The covering is 100% polyamide with a raffia-like look, so it should be chosen as a decorative synthetic textile rather than described as natural raffia. This distinction helps when comparing it with the genuine plant-fibre ranges.

The texture is applied to a supporting slat and available in selected finishes. It brings a softer visual effect to the window while retaining the ability to tilt the slats. The underlying support and the selected width are confirmed in the quotation.

WOVEN TEXTURE VENETIAN BLINDS

Planning your specification

Options to discuss

- Compatible woven-look colours
- Supported wood or aluminium construction
- Ladder cords or tapes where suitable

Practical points

- Not natural raffia
- Covering direction can change on wider blinds
- A sample is recommended to assess texture

How it works

The range covers 50mm and 70mm slats. On larger blinds the direction of the covering may need to change because of the material width. That can alter the way the texture reads across the window, so we check orientation before the final specification is approved.

Choosing the finish and details

Compare the woven surface beside your upholstery and wall finishes, paying attention to texture as well as colour. A physical sample is more useful than a screen image for this purpose. The finish, ladder arrangement and control are selected as one compatible set.
